Scon after World war II friction developed between Element Gottwald, Chairman of the Czechosloval Communist Party (KSC), and Radolf Slansly, Secretary-General of the Party. Slansly had returned to Prague after the war with the intention of building a powerful organizational apparatus with a general secretariat completely devoted to him. In the sumer of 1945, therefore, he purged the general secretariat of those who had been newbers of Gottwald's ore-war faction in Prague, including Vacley David, Ivan Boly, and Cldrich

- 2. David has been a member of the ASC since the thirties, although before the war he was not active publicly. During Lordd Har II he was a number of the Communist unlerground which fought against the Germans. Devid did not play a conspicuous role, however, and so manaked to ercayo arrest. He is a clerklife type of person, indecisive, not very bright, but obedient and disciplined. In the newly established Central Jeoretarist of the Party, David had become chief of the carre department. He had been supported by Josef irosner, head of the trague region of the LSC, and Gottwald. Tresnar and Gottwald, who had known David before the war, were sure that he would unconditionally obey their directives and not act independently. The cadre department's function was to appoint Communists to ley positions in the government and in nationalized indestry. Ivan Holy, former deruty of the Communist Party for the Prague region, had been appointed head of the organizational department and (Idrich Illas chief of the propaganda department.
- Claushy had David transferred to Parlia ent as a Communist deputy, Holy assigned to doing Party worl in the Prague districts, and Mas made head of the National Cormittee of Vinohrady (Prague 12) district. Classy was not satisfied with these denotions, however, and in 1946 he appointed Blas chief of the housing department of the Central National Correittee in Frague. During Illas' tenure there, various machinetions and mismanagement in the allotment of apart onts were revealed. His was suspended and Slansly insisted on his punishment and discharge from the Farty. Upon Gottwald's intervention, however, the affair was dropped and blas was made a connercial manager in nationalized industry. After Clandy's receval, Cottuald appointed Flas Czechoslovak Unister to Servey.

- 4. David played a passive role in Parliament, partly because of his personality and partly because he reclized that as long as Slanely was in evetrol, none of the people he had removed could better their position in the Party. Gettuald continued to support Pavid, however. The President frequently praised him and urged him to take part in Parliamentary delegations abroad so that he could acquire foreign experience. With Slansly out of the way, Gottwald on 31 January 1953 appointed David Limister of Fereign affairs.
- 5. In 1945, Clarky also opposed the appointment of Frosnar, another member of Gottwald's clique, to the post of Deputy Constany-General of the ESC. A compromise was reached between Gottwald and Clarky according to which Frosnar was appointed head of the Prague region of the Party.
- 6. Gottwald's appointment of David as Foreign Minister schieved a much greater purpose than that of verely revarding a friend. The previous Foreign Minister, Vilian Siroky, a clansly man, is very ambitions and a master of behind-the-scenes intrigues. Firsty is also a patient non as shown by the fact that it took him five years to wrest control of the Communist Party in Slovakia from Gustav Husak, Vladinir Clementis, Laco Novomesky, Daniel Okali, and Jozef Soltesz. Siroky appreciated the advantages to be gained from the position of Minister of Foreign Affairs; these included frequent direct centact with lescow, not only through the Seviet Ambassador in Prague, but also through personal contact with the Brenlin as a member of Government delegations to the UfSR. Consequently, whon Clementic was in New York in 1949 as head of the Czech United Nations delegation, tock charge of the Foreign Ministry despite Clementis' opposition. Later, with Slansly's aid, Siroly removed Clementis and succeeded him as Foreign Minister. Slansly and Siroly had obtained the approval of Moscow for this move without the Inouledge of Gottwald. Gottwald was opposed to the removal of Clementis and delayed it until compelled by Moscow to give his consent. Gottwald realized that fireky would exploit his new position to further his own career, whereas he had already decided to dominate the Foreign Ministry himself. Sircly was primarily concerned with gaining control of the direct channel to the Krenlin. Secretary-Ceneral of the Party Slansly and Prime Mnister Antonin Zapotocly, in addition to President Gottwald, had direct access to Moscow. Gottwald's first ain when he began to centralize power in his hands in 1950 was to bring under his control all contacts with the Ire lin. The elimination of Slansly was a major step forward in this plan.
- 7. The recent reorganization of the Government was merely a continuation of Gottwald's effort to centralize power. Thus the appointment of David was designed to eliminate Siroly's contact with the Kreulin. This became even more imperative when, after Slansly's removal, Siroly became the mumber two Communist as head of the Sloval Communist Party. Gottwald planned to make Siroky responsible for the accelerated economic development of Slovalia. It was a foregone conclusion that Siroly would fail and thus the way would be paved for his liquidation. Despite the cool relationship between Gottwald and Zapotocky, the latter did not interfere in Gottwald's actions against firely because he, too, was afraid of an increase of Siroly's power at the expense of his own.
- 8. With Slansky out of the way, Gottwald turned to the problem of eliminating Zapo ocky. His reorganization of the Government early in 1953 cut into Zapotocky's power sphere. He plenned next to replace Zapotocky as Prine Linister by Jarcair Dolansky. An indication of Gottwald's increased strength was shown in the composition of the Czech delegation to Stalin's funeral: the Sloval Communist Party was represented by Minister of National Security, Marol Baciler, a Gottwald man, rather than by the head of the Party, Sirely; the Government was represented by Minister of National Defense Alexej Cepicka, Gottwald's son-in-law, and not by Prime Minister Zapotocky.

9. With Gottward's death, the center of power shifted. Zapatocky, as read of the Government and the nost powerful Communist, becare number one can in the Party. Zapotocky has no competitors of any importance, although Sirely is a potentially dangerous rival. Zapotocky is compelled to continue the tactics started against Sirely by Gottwald. Zapotocky can count on the legalty of the Gottwald faction headed by Dolansky, Antonia Movetay, and Vaclay Ropecky, not from devetion but from the emigencies of the situation. Sirely's only hope lies in Moscow's support. Zapotocky is already comprenised in the eyes of Moscow for his responsibility for the underficiallment of deliveries from Czecheskowskia to the USSR. Sirely does not share this blame because he did not deal with economic matters except for the industrialization of Slovakia. Another factor against Zapotocky is his membership in that group of old-guard revolutionaries which is being liquidated throughout the Papoles' Democracies. Furthermore, he was originally a Social Democrat. If the Kremlin should decide in favor of Sirely, a new radicalism in demestic policy and new Party purges could be expected.
